

The PACT project trains young Caucasian researchers in structuring and developing research projects and wants to transfer knowledge about project development from EU-projects to the Caucasus.

Why focus on the Caucasus area?

Armenia, Azerbaijan and Georgia all have developed national priorities in strengthening international relations. International project development and grant writing skills are seen as the basis for developing transnational academic projects in the future. PACT wants to give young researchers in these countries tools to learn how to develop their own project ideas, structure them in order to develop projects, and to find financing.

YOU ARE AN EXPERT EU-PROJECT MANAGER: WHY SHOULD YOU WANT TO GET INVOLVED IN PACT?

- ★ As expert in EU-project development, you might be interested in creating links with Eastern countries – you surely know how much better your proposals will look if you include partners from third countries. Getting involved will link you to new contacts
- ★ As experienced project developers you might want to help young colleagues to learn from your experience and to further develop their skills in this area. Getting involved will boost the community of project managers beyond the EU and give you visibility as an expert
